

Instructor: Date:

Learner: Regional Branch:

Program: Center:

CONTENT

• Let's Start! • Let's Explore! • Let's Practice! • Extension Activity • Target Words • Learning Points

Let's Start!

Are you an artist at heart?

Learning Outcome

Identify and describe events in the news in a range of social and work contexts.

Ask your partner:

- How would you describe your personality?
- Have you done a personality test? When?

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about behavior and personality.
- I can talk about someone's feelings and reactions.
- I can speculate about feelings and impressions.

Let's Explore!

In her article for Cambridge Life, Sally explores the idea of personality tests. What type are you?

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Using a personality profile is a way to evaluate the attributes and values a person has, as well as any life skills they possess. Originally, the goal of knowing a personality profile was to allow an employer to maximize how well an employee performed on the job and how much they contributed to the company. Now, personality tests are something many people find fascinating. They are very popular. People must enjoy thinking about their personality, even though the results can be surprising or even shocking.

The questions asked during a personality profile test are specifically designed to point out how a person makes decisions, the way in which they communicate, as well as their general attitude. This information can then be used to select the best employee for a certain project or task.

The Myers-Briggs test separates people into 16 well-defined categories. In my opinion, that can't always be the case. Are you excited about the idea of challenge? Do you feel annoyed when people disagree with you? If so, you must be the Executive type. Are you worried about what people think? Are social situations somewhat frustrating to you? You must fall into the Artist type. Whatever you think about the results of your tests, it's entertaining to talk about personality.

Let's Practice!

Sally finds personality tests interesting*. Do you agree?

*Sally is interested in the test.

Instructions: Read the sentences. Write the adjectives correctly (-ed or -ing). Practice saying the sentences aloud with a partner. Correct each other.

1. Personality tests are something many people find _____. (fascinate)
2. The results of personality tests can be _____. (surprise)
3. Are you _____ about the idea of challenge? (excite)
4. Do you feel _____ when people disagree with you? (annoy)
5. Whatever you think about the results of your tests, it's _____ to talk about personality. (entertain)

Let's Practice!

Sally speculates about something.

Instructions: Read the dialogue again. Find the missing letters to complete the mystery sentence. Practice saying the sentence aloud with a partner. Correct each other.

P _____ m _____ e _____ t _____ a _____ t _____ p _____

Hint: Why do people find personality tests so fascinating?

Extension Activity

Take a personality test on the Internet and compare your results with a partner.

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- Discuss your personality with a partner.
- Go to a website where you can take a personality test.
- Take the test.
- Discuss the results with your partner. Do you agree with the results? Why or why not?
- Discuss what you find surprising or interesting about the results.

Self-Assessment

Yes No

I discuss behavior and personality.

☐ ☐

I read and answer the questions in a personality test.

☐ ☐

I discuss the results.

☐ ☐

Target Words

- shocking (adjective): very surprising, to the point of feeling shocked e.g. The results of personality tests can be surprising or even shocking.
- entertaining (adjective): fun; amusing
e.g. Whatever you think about the results of your tests, it's entertaining to talk about personality.
- well-defined (adjective): definite; separate e.g. The Myers-Briggs test separates people into 16 well-defined categories.
- annoyed (adjective): feeling unhappy; irritated
e.g. Do you feel annoyed when people disagree with you?
- executive (noun): the person responsible for a company
e.g. If so, you must be the Executive type.
- attribute (noun): characteristic; feature of a person
e.g. Using a personality profile is a way to evaluate the attributes of potential employees.
- values (noun): what a person believes about the world or how they see the world
e.g. Assessing values is part of the personality test.

Learning Points

Talking About Someone's Feelings and Reactions

You talk about feelings and reactions using adjectives.

Adjectives that end in -ed are used to describe how a person feels, like annoyed, fascinated, entertained, surprised, worried or tired.

Adjectives that end in -ing are used to describe things and situations, like annoying, entertaining, surprising, worrying or tiring.

These adjectives describe the effect something has on a person.

Examples:

- The results of the test can be surprising or even shocking.
- Are you excited about the idea of challenge? Do you feel annoyed when people disagree with you?

Speculating about Feelings and Impressions

When you speculate about something, you are making a guess based on what you know about the situation.

You can show you are speculating about something by using a modal, like must or can't.

The modal is followed by a verb in the base form. You do not use "to".

These are formal structures.

Examples:

- Personality tests are very popular. People must enjoy thinking about their personality.
- The Myers-Briggs test separates people into 16 well-defined categories. In my opinion, that can't always be the case.

